While some would prefer that the matter came from some other source, it would have been political suicide to appear in opposition and the plan went through. Mayor Armstrong has not divulged the names of the manufacturers up to date, and the citizens who take cash from the personal purwho take cash from the personal pur-poses to promote the industrial inter-ests of New London are satisfied to go in blind, being content to contribute when the mayor says the business proposition is bona fide. Queer! Especially as some of these same people are so much opposed to him political-ly that they have looked with dis-favor and distrust upon anything that favor and distrust upon anything that emanated from the mayor.

Perhaps the largest city meetings in the old court house were those to oppose propositions coming from the mayor, and principally because they came from him. Of course, in order to have proper transfer made of a portion of the Gashouse lot, sanction in city meeting was necessary. In portion of the Gashouse lot, sanction in city meeting was necessary. In these meetings the attendance was small and all in favor of the transfer. This in marked contrast to city meetings that have preceded during the Armstrong administration, which goes to show that the tide is turning and some of the objectors who have been on the wrong course are receing Miss Winifred Paimer from East been on the wrong course are reefing Greenwich is at the old homestead for sails and tacking ship.

Speaking of the mayor reminds that tt W. L. Main's this week Friday vening.

Russell and Morton Cooke were in Westerly Monday or his week Friday in as persistent in troubling some of his opponents as they are in making it unpleasant for him. For nearly ten years as a private citizen and pub-lic official, this bright young man has been the thorn in the side of the Thames Ferry company. This very week before a legislative hearing he This very was the leader in a movement for a free ferry, a highway bridge, or reduc-tion of ferry tolls, or anything else that would lessen the profits of the present lessees of the ferry from the city of New London.
